

TRUST DISSOLVED

Standard Oil Company Declared Illegal by the

U. S. SUPREME COURT

Must Restore Business to Subsidiary Concerns in Six Months—Harlan Dissents on Classification.

In an opinion, announced on Monday, which is regarded by many as the most important and far-reaching ever handed down by the greatest tribunal of this country, the Supreme Court of the United States, holds that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, comprising 33 allied corporations and representing a capital aggregating $600,000,000 must dissolve within six months, and its business be restored to the subsidiary concerns.

In its decision the Court holds: That the Standard Oil Company is a monopoly in restraint of trade. That this giant corporation must be dissolved within six months. Corporations whose contracts are "not unreasonably restrictive of competition" are not affected.

Other great corporations whose acts may be called into question will be dealt with according to the merits of their particular cases.

The order for dissolution was based on two legal reasons:

First—That it is a combination in restraint of trade under the first section of the Sherman act.

Second—That because of its activities as a combination, it has become a monopoly in restraint of trade under the second section of the Sherman act.

Tobacco Trust May Fare Likewise

The Court was unanimous as to the main features of the decision. Justice Harlan dissenting only as to a limitation of the application of the Sherman Anti-Trust law. The decision was read by Chief Justice White.

In determining that the Standard Oil Company is a monopoly, the Supreme Court went further than many legal experts expected. The opinion rendered virtually leaves nothing to add in the case of the American Tobacco Company, whose dissolution is urged on the ground of it being a monopoly. The petition of the Government in applying for the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company based the request only on the ground that it was a combination in restraint of trade. The Circuit Court, in rendering a decision, went beyond that point and held that it was also a monopoly. The Supreme Court sustained the lower tribunal in both respects. A conservative estimate of Monday's decision concludes that 1,200 holding companies, having more than 8,000 subsidiary concerns, and representing ten billions of capital, will be directly affected.

Based on Intent to Monopolize

The decision of the Supreme Court was based on the common law. In its opinion Chief Justice White declared that the Sherman act did not go further than the common law. It has followed that it was competent to show intent. From this reasoning it demonstrated that the intent of the combination was to monopolize the business in a certain industry. It then became a question for determination as to whether the restraint exercised to procure a monopoly was reasonable or unreasonable. In the case of the Standard Oil Company it (Continued on Fourth Page.)

Memorial Day Sermon

The minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. W. V. Ganoe, who was a soldier the last year of the Civil War, has been invited to preach the Memorial Day sermon on Sunday, May 28, at 11 o'clock a. m. In addition to the Grand Army Post, all soldiers of '61 to '65, and all of the Danish American War, are invited. Also, the Bedford Company of the National Guard, the Sons of Veterans and the Patriotic Sons of America. There will be special music and elaborate flag decorations. It is the wish that our young people will be present as this marks the half century since the beginning of the Civil War, and also the fact that in a few years the Grand Army of the Republic as an organization, must end with the decease of its membership. It has been suggested that this be Union Service of the churches in assembly Hall as the Baccalaureate of the High School will be a Union service in the evening.

NO JAIL SENTENCE

For Labor Leaders Is Decision of Supreme Court

GOMPERS, MITCHELL, MORRISON

Cannot Be Imprisoned—Offense Civil, Not Criminal—Free Speech Plea, Leaders' Main Contention, Void.

Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison, President, Vice President and Secretary, respectively, of the American Federation of Labor, will not be obliged to go to jail.

The Supreme Court of the United States on Monday handed down an opinion in which it held that the sentences of imprisonment imposed upon these labor leaders by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, for alleged disobedience to a boycott injunction, were erroneous, and that that Court and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia erred in treating the contempt proceedings as a criminal case and not a civil one. The effect of holding the proceedings a civil one was to make jail sentences impossible. Hence the jail sentences had to be set aside. The Court unanimously held that the only sentences that could be imposed upon the labor leaders were fines.

The Court was led to hold that the contempt proceedings in this case must be civil in nature because criminal punishment is exercised by Courts to force persons to do acts commanded. In the present case, the Court took the view that the labor men were being sent to jail, not to make them do something the Court ordered, but because of "something they had done."

To correct the error the case was sent back to the local courts with direction that it be dismissed. At the same time the Court expressly made it possible for civil proceedings to be instituted against the labor men by the Buck Stove and Range Company of St. Louis, at whose instance the original contempt case was brought.

Despite the escape of the leaders from jail sentences, the main contention of their defense—that the right of free speech was infringed in enjoining a boycott—was not upheld by the Court, which held, on the contrary, that the constitutional right of free speech and free press affords no protection to the boycott.

Whole Case Now Settled

Inasmuch as all the differences between the labor men and the Buck Stove and Range Company have been adjudicated, including the "boycott" case out of which the contempt proceedings arose, Monday's decision is probably the last heard of this famous action.

History of the Case

The charge of contempt against the labor unions arose out of a long and bitter labor war between organized labor and the Buck Stove & Range Company of St. Louis. The St. Louis Court of the District of Columbia to prevent, by injunction, the American Federation of Labor and its officials from boycotting its own products or the business of those who dealt with it. The company claimed that the Federation was trying to unionize the company's shops. The labor leaders urged that the company was "unfair" to labor. The head of the company was J. W. Van Cleave, President of (Continued on Fourth Page.)

KLINE LIQUOR BILL FAILS

School Code Now Up to Governor Tener.

At Wednesday's session of the State Senate the Kline Liquor Bill which was amended in the House so as practically allow brewers and distillers to peddle their product, whiskey in quantities or not less than two quarts and beer not less than twelve pints, was defeated, three Senators having changed their vote, by 25 to 19.

Two methods are open for the friends of the bill. They can have it sent back to the House for that body to recede from the amendment which was attached in that body. It would then go to the Governor as the Senate passed the bill in its original form. They can also proceed in the Senate for a re-consideration of the vote by which concurrence in the House amendment failed.

The School Code has passed the House and the Senate. The vote in the House was 133 to 49 in favor of the bill. Representative Matt voted for it. In the Senate the vote on concurring in the conference report was 37 to 8. The objection raised in the House was to the taxing feature.

Fined For Looping

An Everett correspondent of the North American says, May 13:

"Harry Markey recently caught the big 28-inch California trout which had been the terror to the funny tribe in Three Spring run for several years."

"The rumor went abroad that the fish was looped with a wire. The fish warden heard this and a man was sent to Williamsport to examine the skin of the fish, which was in possession of Mr. Sweeney of that city. Under the microscope marks of a wire were found and Markey was arrested on a charge of catching the trout in an illegal manner. He was found guilty and fined $20 and costs. Markey took an appeal and the case will come up in the court of this county."

WASHINGTON LETTER

Communication From Our Regular Correspondent

THE DEMOCRATIC HOUSE

Well Organized and Aggressive—Express Investigation Under Way—Parcels Post Desired.

Washington, D. C., May 15.—The national legislative body now in session in Congress is proving to be an unruly team. The Republican majority in the Senate cannot elect a president pro tem. The insurgent Senators have the balance of power and led by Senators La Follette and Cummins were able to defeat Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire, the caucus nominee.

The Democratic House is well organized and aggressive, and with its powerful majority acting at a unit, is passing much important legislation. It has passed the Canadian Reciprocity Bill and the Farmers' Free List Bill, and these measures are now before the Senate. Delegations of farmers professing to be representative are besieging the Senate and the President in an effort to kill the Canadian Reciprocity Bill, but on the other hand there are delegations from the west and northwest, including agricultural representatives, much more numerous, urging the passage by the Senate of the reciprocity act. Chairman Underwood is confident that a much more important tariff program than has yet been presented to the House will be passed by this body, the majority of whom it appears are in favor of free wool. The wiser heads of the Democratic majority are in favor of materially reducing the tariff on wool, but are opposed to so drastic a measure as admitting it duty free. The wool schedule is an important source of revenue to the government, and to materially reduce the tariff will increase this revenue and will at the same time enable the millions of wearers of wool garments in the United States to dress more elegantly and more comfortably. The bill is of course objectionable to the Wyoming Senator, whom the late Senator Dooliver said was the greatest shepherd since Abraham, and a few herdsmen in the sparse settlements in the northwest. It will also interfere with the Massachusetts factory monopoly, but it will result in great benefit to ninety-nine one hundredths of the population of the United States.

Investigating Express Companies

One of the most important investigations ever made by the Interstate Commerce Commission is that of the express companies of the United States. This investigation is now under way. The commission has before it much material which it is at present studying and arranging. It is thought that the outcome will be a complete change in the express business of the country. Quite recently there was held in Washington a convention relative to the much-talked-about and written-about parcels post. This was attended by distinguished men from various parts of the country. Some of them have made a thorough study of the express situation. It is somewhat remarkable that a resolution was passed by the convention favoring the complete absorption or control of the express companies by the government. Assuming that half the things complained against the express companies are sustained, it will not be strange if the demand for government ownership will be urgent after the Interstate Commerce Commission's report has been published. In the states of Iowa, Minnesota and California railway commissioners have recently made investigations into the operations of these companies. Business interests throughout the country are urging an examination relative to the express companies, insisting that their rates are exorbitant and that their practices are unfair. Last fall, two hundred and eight commercial organizations petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission to make the inquiry which is now under way. This commission, let it be understood, has full authority over express rates, regulations and practices. It is claimed by those who have thoroughly studied the subject that there is no reason whatever for the existence of express companies independent of railroad companies, and it is a well-known fact that the railroad companies themselves are extensive stock owners, if they do not actually control the majority of stock of the express companies, and that they are using these companies to enormously increase their profits with the result of onerously oppressing the millions who have to resort to them as common carriers. The profits in the case of some of the companies it is known are as high as 200% to 300%. There is no reason why the United States should not carry express pack-

Earth's Winding Sheet

As dust was the beginning, so shall it be the end of all things earthly. It is the cosmic undertaker of the ages, and silently, resistlessly, and eternally it has performed its function. The proudest monuments built by man, the Sphinx, the Pyramids, the Colossus of Rhodes, the Gardens of Babylon and the glories of the Grecian art, have either crumbled to the dust whence they sprang or have been buried deep in its winding sheet. So far as human grandeur is concerned, even "imperial Caesar, dead and turned to clay, might stop a hole to keep the wind away!" No one knows how many Londons or Jerusalems there have been. Excavations into the dust on which these cities are built reveal the relics and remains of former cities which once flourished and were mighty, but were finally entombed in the course of untold centuries by the gradual but immense deposits of dust and debris. When Macaulay's New Zealander shall muse in profound melancholy upon the shattered remains of London Bridge, he will behold a vast battlefield, where half-buried columns and desert sands shall proclaim the final sovereignty of dust.

The mighty Himalayas, whose snowy summits have as yet defied the foot of man, are slowly crumbling into dust, and the lofty peaks of the Andes are splintering, fragment by fragment, until they too, shall become clods of the valley. Every wind that blows "soft o'er Ceylon's Isle" carries away in tiny dust particles some of its beautiful hills and vales. Every brooklet trickling down the rugged mountain side bears part of a continent to the sea. Every year the Mississippi River carries down to the gulf little motes of matter, river-worn dust, amounting to over 7½ billion cubic feet. In 3,500 years, the Mississippi cuts down its entire basin one foot, and as the mean height of the continent is only 2,000 feet, were the process to go on uninterrupted, North America would be reduced to the sea level in about 7,000,000 years. When we stop to consider what the other great rivers of the globe are doing, such as the Nile, the Yang-tse-kiang, the Yukon, and the Danube, we can appreciate in some measure the everlasting waste that is eating away great continents, and foresee the inevitable supremacy of the Kingdom of Dust.—J. Gordon Ogden in the June Popular Mechanics Magazine.

A SINGULAR CASE

Of Supposed Murder and Its Consequences

By ORVILLE GRANT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

One evening in the early part of the last century a man alighted from the daily mail coach before the Royal Arms, in Londonderry, Ireland. The porter took down a large trunk, or, rather, ironbound box such as was frequently used by travelers in those days, and carried it into the inn. The man was dressed in the costume of the period—a beaver hat, the crown sloping toward the top; a "spiketail" green coat, with snuff-colored knee breeches, ruffled shirt and shoes with silver buckles. His face was cleanly shaven.

The stranger entered his name as Algernon Perkins and was assigned to room No. 26, on the second floor. Drawing out his wallet, he counted out 100 sovereigns ($500) and deposited them with the landlord for safe keeping. He then went to his room, ordering his supper to be sent up to him.

About 10 o'clock the same night a man with a fiery red beard, a beaver bell crown hat, a buff coat with flowing skirt and trousers, recently in fashion, tight to the skin and strapped over his instep, entered the same inn, gave his name as David Brough and called for a room.

"I should like my old rooms," he said, "Nos 25 and 26."

The landlord failed to remember the man, but, not caring to admit the fact, told him that No. 26 was occupied, but 25 was vacant. With an expression of dissatisfaction at not getting both rooms he accepted the substitute. Then he went upstairs.

Later Mr Brough in his nightshirt opened his door, called a porter who was passing through the hall, slipped a half sovereign into his hand and said to him:

"I'm to go off in the Royal mail early in the morning and wish my trunk to be ready to lift on to the coach. Carry it down and leave it in the hall below, near the front door."

The porter pocketed the tip, carried the trunk downstairs and placed it beside the front door. The landlord, who was nodding behind the bar, roused himself and asked what he was doing. The porter told him that a gentleman who was going early in the morning had ordered him to place the trunk where it would be ready. The landlord soon after took up a candle and went to his rooms.

At 5 o'clock in the morning a milkman, stopping at the Royal Arms to deliver milk, saw a man with a red beard emerge from the front door of the inn carrying a heavy trunk under the weight of which he staggered and pass down the street. The milkman delivered the inn's morning supply of milk and drove away, thinking no more of the matter.

At 10 o'clock the same morning a housemaid reported to the landlord that the gentleman in 26 had not left his room; that she had listened at the door without hearing any sound, and she believed the room was vacant. The landlord went to the room with her, knocked and, receiving no reply, kicked open the door.

The room was found vacant and in confusion. It communicated with No. 25, that had been taken by Mr. Brough, and as no one remembered to have seen that gentleman since the night before the landlord tapped on the door between the two rooms. Receiving no reply, he opened the door, went into the room and found that the bed had not been slept in. Bloodstains were found on the towels.

Subsequently the porter told how he had been paid a large fee by the occupant of No. 25 to carry down his trunk, and the landlord remembered that No. 25 had no luggage. Then came the milkman and told of having seen a man in a buff suit carrying a trunk out of the inn early in the morning. Lastly the landlord remembered that he had a hundred sovereigns of Mr. Perkins' money in his strongbox.

The case excited a great deal of attention in the country roundabout. Peculiar circumstances connected with it contributed to fire the public curiosity. Did Mr. Brough go to the hotel purposely to murder Mr. Perkins? Who was Perkins, and who was Brough? Did Brough get a sufficient amount to pay him for killing a man and forever after being hunted by the police and haunted by his conscience? The favorite theory was that Brough knew that Perkins had a hundred sovereigns on his person; that he had followed him to the inn, taken a room communicating with Perkins' room, entered the latter during the night, murdered Perkins, packed the body in Perkins' trunk and carried it away the next morning. But Brough was probably unaware that Perkins had deposited the money with the landlord and probably after all missed what he was after.

Since no one knew where Mr. Brough had gone—and there were no trained detectives in those days—there was nothing to do but wait for information to come of itself. It was learned in a few days that a gentleman carrying his own trunk outside the city had stopped the coach going northward and been taken on. The man wore a buff suit and had a red beard. He was believed to be Brough, but after tracing him through several towns the trail was lost.

If there was anything wanting in the matter of circumstantial proof that Perkins had been murdered it was supplied by the fact that his hundred sovereigns remained with the landlord. He neither called for it nor did any one present an order for it. And yet there were persons who believed that if he had been murdered his family would make the fact known that he was missing. No person in the country roundabout nor indeed in Ireland was reported missing, but communication in those days was very slow, and news traveled neither fast nor far. Since no further knowledge was gained as to the identity of either Brough or Perkins, after awhile interest in the case died down, and it was at last forgotten.

About the time this curious case was the talk in and around Londonderry, Ireland, a mysterious robbery occurred in London, England. Edith, daughter of Edward Trelawney, was about to be married, and her father had drawn from his bankers £3,000 for her dowry that he might have it ready for the settlements which were to be made the next day. Not having a safe in the house, he placed it under his pillow. In the morning it was gone.

He expected to find that some one of his servants had disappeared during the night, but on going downstairs he found the butler setting the table for breakfast, the housemaid dusting in the library and the cook in the kitchen. These were the only servants kept, and there was no one else in the house who could have taken the money. The matter was reported to the police, but in those days the machinery for hunting up criminals which exists today was unknown, and all hope of recovery of the treasure was abandoned within a few hours after it was lost.

Marriages in England were in that day dependent upon the settlements. The groom in this case, Thomas Nolan, had studied medicine and required capital to set him up in his profession. He would receive £10,000 from his father at the latter's death, but not till then, and if he married Miss Trelawney without a dot his father would cut him off from his inheritance. The loss of what was to have been her dowry broke off the match.

Not long after this rupture between two lovers Anthony Barton, who had for a long while been madly in love with Miss Trelawney, renewed or attempted to renew his attentions to her. But she would have nothing to do with him. He was a persistent fellow, and it was difficult for her to get rid of him. In order to help his case he told her father that he had inherited £8,000 from an uncle who had died in America. But even this failed, for, while the daughter did not love Barton, her father had a very poor opinion of him. Indeed, there was a secret understanding between Nolan and Miss Trelawney that neither would marry until he should have achieved success or had inherited his portion of his father's estate.

Two years passed, during which young Dr. Nolan, whose father would do nothing for him peculiarly, made little progress in his profession, and marriage with a portionless girl was out of the question. One day when Miss Trelawney returned from shopping she found in her room a bag containing the lost dowry, with the exception of a hundred pounds. In the bag was a paper signed by Anthony Barton. It was a confession and read as follows:

"When you receive this I shall be where no one will find me. They say love is ennobling. It has made me the most despicable of men. I am going to confess what I have done. I have made two mysteries. I will explain them both, but I have had a confederate. I did not steal your dowry, but I employed another to do it for me. I did not want your money, but I wanted to break off your match with Nolan, hoping that by doing so I could in time persuade you to be my wife. The man who stole the dowry took away with him as much more money. He and the money were sure to be missed and he would be hunted. I am not going to betray him. How he got your dowry, how it is returned to you, must remain a mystery. The other mystery I will explain, for you will need it to recover a hundred pounds belonging to you.

"My confederate determined to disappear from the face of the earth. Not long after his departure he put up at a hotel in Ireland, having with him a trunk in which there was little besides a change of apparel and a red beard. He left £100 with the landlord and went to his room. Dressing himself as another person and putting on the beard, he got out of a window, dropped on a shed and, going to the front door, entered as a guest, securing the room next to and communicating with his own. Then he sent his trunk downstairs, cut his finger purposely, wiping the blood on the towels, and in the morning, as the newcomer, went down and carried the trunk away.

"All this was done to leave the impression that the first guest had been murdered by the second and carried away in the trunk. The deposit he made was but a small portion of his plunder and was intended to prove that he had not left the inn alive. His ruse was successful. Some months after he put it in practice those who had lost money by him tracked him to the Irish inn and learned, as they believed, that he had been murdered there. The landlord, however, refused to pay the money the murdered man had left, without proper proofs. I think you can get it by presenting this confession, which is duly executed."

The money was recovered, but before that Dr. Nolan and Miss Trelawney had been married. As for Barton, he was never again heard from.

MANY FEATURES

In the North American Baseball Supplement.

With more features than have ever before appeared in one edition, the annual baseball supplement of The North American will appear Sunday, May 21.

For years this special baseball number has been regarded as the greatest work of its kind ever published, and this spring's edition will far surpass all previous ones.

Color pages, illustrating the speed that is required in the national game and group pictures of the Athletics and Phillies are only a few of the features.

The Tristate page contains pictures of all the players in the league, and a special story on the batting, fielding and other figures of the men in the circuit.

"Diplomatic Strokes of Our Baseball Jeffersons," an illustrated story, gives the fans a good idea of the inside workings of a big league team, and contains many humorous incidents about stars of the past and present.

All the minor leagues, independent and amateur teams from all parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware are given special mention in the big supplement. Pictures of the managers and captains of 100 of these teams are included.

On the school and college pages, all the leaders are shown, and there are stories on the progress of the various nines.

Lesson VIII.—Second Quarter,
For May 21, 1911.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Isa. v, 1-12—Memory Verse, 11—Golden Text, Isa. v, 22—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Our lesson title, "Song of the Vineyard," must be considered in the light of the first verse, "A song of my beloved touching his vineyard." In Ezek. xv we learn that the only use of the vine is to bear fruit, and, failing in that, it is good for nothing. In John xv we learn that fruitless branches are gathered by men and burned, like the salt which has no savor and is good for nothing but to be trodden underfoot of men (Matt. v, 13).

Verse 7 of our lesson tells us that the house of Israel is the Lord's vineyard here referred to and the men of Judah His preferred plant, but instead of producing the desired fruit they were yielding only wild grapes, described in the sixfold woe of the chapter and in Hos. x, 1, as an empty vine bringing forth fruit unto himself. According to the six woes, they were mighty to drink wine, enjoy pleasures, gather property, call things by their wrong names and sin.

He brought them out of Egypt, cast out the nations before them and planted them in a good land, but because of their sin He had to turn His face from them, and their only hope was in the man of His right hand, the son of man strong for God (Ps. lxxxv, 8-19). According to our lesson, He had done everything for them that could be done for a vineyard, but as in the parable of Matt. xxi, 33-41, they beat and killed His servants and even the heir to the vineyard also. According to our lesson chapter, they regard not the work of the Lord nor consider the operation of His hands, but cast away the law of the Lord of hosts and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel (verses 12-24).

His pitiful cry over them is always the same, whether through the prophets or through His Son. "I am the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt. Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it, but My people would not hearken to My voice, and Israel would none of Me" (Ps. lxxxix, 10, 11). "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, * * * how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not" (Matt. xxiii, 37). Such unbelieving people who turn away from God and His word are said to be "drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink" (Isa. xxix, 9).

It is most interesting to note that in the chapter following our lesson chapter we have a vision of the earth filled with the glory of the Lord. Compare verses 11, 12 and 22 with chapter vi, 3. Better say contrast the drunkenness with the glory. Then note the same contrast in Hab. ii, 14, 15, and Eph. v, 18, and observe that at Pentecost spirit filled people were said to be full of new wine (Acts ii, 4-13). There is no remedy for self righteous, self pleasing, unbelieving people, but such a sight of Jesus Christ dying for their sins as will break their hard hearts and lead them to cry, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." One cannot do this for another, but He who said "I am the true vine" said also concerning the Holy Spirit, "He will convince of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment" (John xvi, 7, 8).

If we have been redeemed by precious blood and been caused to see something of the beauty of the Lord it is not for us to condemn other sinners nor think them hopeless, but so manifest Jesus Christ to them by word and deed that the Spirit may, through us if He will, reveal Jesus Christ to them and lead them to Him. There is just one thing that the vine is for, and if we are real branches of the true vine He will bear the desired fruit that God may be glorified if we truly abide.

That fruit may not be any great thing that will gain the admiration of people, but just a meek and quiet spirit, patient and long suffering, it may be, under great provocation or even cruelty. Think of the Lord's patience with Israel and with each of us and consider Him who endured lest ye be weary. Think of being strengthened with all might, according to His glorious power, unto all patience and long suffering, with joyfulness (Col. i, 11). Remember that the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, self control (Gal. v, 22, 23), and all that is opposed is from the adversary.

By the word of God and the spirit of God we must first be saved and then by the same word and spirit abide and bear fruit. The question of verse 4, "What could have been done more to My vineyard that I have not done in it?" suggests the question for every sinner, drunken or sober, for all have sinned and all are guilty (Rom. iii, 19). What more could the Lord do that He has not done for your salvation? Consider John iii, 16, and answer as to what more is necessary.

If you do not yield to such love and receive Him as your personal Saviour and then so abide that He may bear fruit through you and gather fruit from you it must be true of you that you are despising His word and disregarding His great work on your behalf and thus continuing under the wrath of God (John iii, 36).

WELCOME, SWEET BIRDS!

There's old robin at my window
Singing his sweet song again.
Welcome back, you dear old birdie,
With your merry, cheering strain.
You may eat your fill of cherries,
You may strip the branches bare,
If you'll call me at the sunrise
With your sweet, soul cheering air.

Hark the lark! Oh, see him yonder
Soaring right into the sun!
Will he sing his little heart out
Ere his morning praise is done?
Welcome back, sweet music teacher,
I shall join your joyful praise
To the God who made the springtime
And the golden summer days.

There's the thrush! Just hear him warble!
Listen to his silver bell.
Hear the linnets, wrens and starlings,
Mocking birds, in wood and dell.
Glad to see you back, dear birdies,
You are part of God's great plan
To make earth a second Eden
And redeem poor fallen man.

THE TRIO

By CUTHBERT R. KRAFFT

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Gerald Herbert, George Tisdale and I were bosom friends. It is not often that three persons become inseparable, for two are liable to pull together, leaving the third out in the cold. Our case was an exception. Nevertheless our trio was broken up, not by another man, but by a woman. She came between Gerald and George directly, then between the two of them and me indirectly.

One evening I got a telephone message from Gerald asking me to meet him and George at the gymnasium at 10 o'clock. He said they were to have a fencing match and wished me to be umpire. At that hour we would be alone. When I got there, instead of finding the two together, Gerald met me and said George would join us in a few minutes. Meanwhile Gerald put on a mask, took up a foil and amused himself stabbing the wall. Presently George came in. I noticed he didn't look at or say anything to Gerald, but got ready at once for the match. Before taking position they put the tips of their foils under my nose and Gerald said:

"Take notice of these foils, Charlie. There was an accident at the Athletic club the other day with foils. The button of one was snapped off and a man got hurt. Afterward it was charged that the man who held the foil purposely used one without a button."

"Go on," I replied. "The buttons on these foils won't come off, I'll guarantee."

They set to, and the way they fenced, I confess, puzzled me. Neither seemed to be trying to pink the other. Neither spoke to the other. They seemed to be fencing against time.

"Oh, get a move on you!" I said. "I don't propose to sit here watching you two fellows go to sleep."

"Go get me a glass of water," said George. "My throat's dry as parched corn."

I went to the cooler and brought him a glass of water. I didn't turn my back on them any longer than necessary to draw the water, but when I turned and went back to them they both looked conscious.

"Been stealing something?" I remarked.

There was no reply from either. George very politely offered the glass to Gerald, who thanked him "very much" and declined. Somehow it struck me that there was something unusual in this politeness between the two. They would more likely have chaffed each other. After taking a sip of the water George set down the glass, and they renewed the contest.

But what a difference! Each man's eye was fixed on the other's. Each watched for a thrust as though his life depended on it and parried it when it came with all the skill he possessed. Every minute they became more earnest. And then I began to notice a look in their faces that surprised and pained me. Their accustomed friendliness was replaced by hate. Their eyes began to gleam; the blood mounted to their faces.

"You two fellows had better stop that fracas," I said. "You're getting riled."

They paid no attention to me. Indeed, I doubt if they heard me, so intent were they on what they were doing. Presently I saw blood running from a gash on the back of Gerald's sword hand.

"Here," I cried, "stop this!"

I was rising to get between them when Gerald made a pass, breaking through George's guard, and I saw the foil go right through the fleshy part of George's arm. When it was withdrawn the sleeve was saturated with blood.

In vain I cried to them to desist. From friends they had become wild animals. They paid no attention to me, and so maddened were they that I did not dare to force myself between them, fearing to get stabbed. A red stream trickling down Gerald's leg was the next evidence of the seriousness of the contest; then when Gerald's point was within an inch of George's heart the latter in the tenth part of a second turned it away. I hurried to find something with which to beat down the weapons and on facing the combatants again saw a door open and Helen Deane step into the room. What I would have needed, a weapon, to accomplish this girl did by her simple presence. The men lowered their foils.

"How did you get on to this?" asked Gerald.

"Your sister overheard."

"Well."

"Drop those foils, both of you, if you value my acquaintance."

The foils rattled on the floor.

"I have known you three friends for a long while," Helen continued. "I will admit that one of you I love."

"Is it I?" asked Gerald quickly.

"No."

"I?" asked George.

"No."

The two men looked at each other; then both turned toward me.

"Charlie?" asked both at once.

"Yes."

They could have knocked me down with a feather. I had worshipped her secretly, but not dreaming that I had any chance with either of the others.

"See the lady home, Charlie," said George. "We'll attend to these cuts."

"It is time you did," I said, and, offering my arm to the prize, I escorted her to her carriage, and we rolled away together.

RAISING THE MAINE

Immense Caissons Now Completely
Encircle the

ILL-FATED VESSEL

Thirty-Five Feet of Water and Seventeen Feet of Mud Ready to be Pumped Out.

(Special Correspondence)

Havana, Cuba, May 13—After an elapse of thirteen years the American people will soon know the cause of the destruction of the battleship "Maine" in the harbor of Havana, on the night of February 15, 1898—an event which worked several changes on the map of the world, was responsible for an era of wonderful prosperity in the United States and greatly increased the prestige of that country.

It was expected that the wreck of the historic battleship would have been exposed to inspection on the thirtieth anniversary of the destruction of that vessel, but the work was a greater undertaking than at first calculated. It is now predicted that the pumps which are to lift the water from the immense coffer dam and leave the battered hulk exposed to view will begin work before the end of the present month. Once this work is begun the pumps will have the space around the "Maine" clear of water within a week; they have a capacity to lift the 1,500,000 cubic feet of water enclosed in the coffer dam in twenty hours, but it is the intention to remove the growth of barnacles, accumulation of slime and moss from the wreck as the water is gradually lowered, in order to obviate the disagreeable odors sure to arise from the decomposition of this growth when exposed to the sun. A large force of men will be thus employed, and all of the growth they remove from the wreck will be pumped out into the open Bay, as a precautionary measure against sickness. After the water has been pumped out, the mud which covers the bottom of the harbor to the depth of seventeen feet will also be removed and the real work on the wreck will commence.

The wreck of the "Maine" lies about one-third of the distance across the harbor from Havana, about a quarter of a mile from the West shore on which the city of Havana is situated. It is submerged in 35 feet of water and 17 feet of mud, there being but the mainmast and a mass of twisted, unrecognizable, torn steel protruding above the surface of the water, with one arm of a davit at another point indicating the side of what had once been a magnificent vessel. The mainmast towers about 40 feet above the water, the extreme top-blown away, but the crow's nest is intact. One of the large steel yard arms attached to this mast is still in place, the outer end now raised from the water into which it had fallen and is in good state of preservation, at least that part of it which was submerged thirteen years ago. To this mast a number of withered wreaths are fastened, souvenirs of the recent memorial exercises held by the American colony in Havana on the occasion of the last anniversary of the explosion which destroyed the good vessel and sent so many Americans to tragic deaths. Those ceremonies, the last to be held at the site of the wreck, were more impressive than any observed on previous anniversaries.

The vicinity of the wreck at the present time presents a scene of busy activity, for there are fourteen separate pieces of floating plant, consisting of pile drivers, derricks, dredges, pumping barges, scows and steamers especially equipped for the work. Near the wreck a small house is built above the water on piles, and it is to this structure a large submerged cable leads the electric power used in the operation of machinery and for lighting purposes, for day and night shifts have been at work for months. About one hundred men are now employed, although as many as 300 have been on the job at one time, when the large caissons were being constructed and great quantities of steel was constantly being handled.

The work now being done occupies a large portion of the harbor, for one of the great suction dredges is operating a distance of 250 yards from the outer edge of the oval of caissons surrounding the wreck; and this oval, consisting of twenty caissons, each fifty feet in diameter, is 514 feet in length and 247 feet in breadth. From this dredge a large tube 24 inches in diameter is connected in joints about 20 feet long, and laid across a number of pontoons up to the oval where the tube terminates at the particular caisson to be filled. Mud and earth, dredged from the bottom of the harbor, is in this manner pumped into each caisson separately, so that they stand up firm and solid, forming an unbroken oval completely around the "Maine" leaving an inner working space of 45 feet all around the wreck.

At the present time the finishing of these caissons is being hurried forward, a little filling being added each day so that the earth within them settles properly and adds strength to the entire structure, which will be severely taxed when the water is pumped out of the immense oval. Then there will be a wall of water rising 52 feet above the ground on which the "Maine" rests. It is the purpose of the surrounding caissons to restrain these waters, enabling the minutest inspection of the hull of the vessel so that the exact truth may be known to the world. As soon as the cause of the explosion is ascertained the work of removal will begin.

THE WATER QUESTION

A special meeting of the town council has been called for tomorrow evening to discuss the matter of the town's water supply, particularly the advisability and practicability of drilling one or more artesian wells above the Todd reservoir.

The water question has been discussed pro and con for years and it is generally admitted that today we do not have an adequate supply. The quality of the water that is flowing into the mains is not questioned but the quantity is not sufficient and the best method of securing greater volume is the perplexing question.

Many and varied have been the plans suggested to supply the needed volume, four of which, the principal ones, have their advocates.

An engineer brought here to look the situation over a couple years ago suggested the erection of a concrete basin below the Todd reservoir to catch the leakage and the pumping of it back into the reservoir with gasoline power.

Another scheme rather strongly supported is to build a large storage reservoir to catch the overflow and the leakage from the Todd.

The third plan is to drill one or more artesian wells above the reservoir and, if necessary, pump water from them into it.

The fourth plan is to stop the leakage of the present dam.

All of the above plans have their supporters and their merits, and it is a matter that deserves the most careful consideration.

The erection of a concrete basin to catch the leakage and the pumping of it back into the dam would save water that is now wasted, serve a good purpose for a time, but it would hardly answer, for when the water falls to a certain level there is no leakage, hence no water to pump back, and a short time after this point is reached it will be necessary to return to the creek.

Should a storage reservoir be constructed, it should be thoroughly investigated whether the head would be high enough to throw the water over the Sproat hill and reach the second stories of dwellings in the more elevated parts of the town, for the water of the main dam would have to be shut off while the content of the storage pond is being used. The expense, too, of constructing such a receptacle should occupy attention. Then, too, it must be remembered that when the water thus stored is consumed and the level of the Todd reservoir is reduced to the point at which it ceases to leak, the time intervening between that day and the starting of the river pump will be but brief.

Even if the present reservoir could be made to hold all the water below the overflow, it is a question if it would supply the demand, for the inflow in dry times is but little. However successfully the work might be done, in extreme drought we would have to follow the old trail to the river, which is just what it is desired to avoid.

We believe that the town council would cheerfully take steps to supply the necessary water if they knew the course that would bring the results; and we believe that that body is acting wisely in holding a meeting tomorrow night to consider the drilling of one or more wells against the mountain side. Should they secure water that would overflow, even at several hundred feet, or that would rise to such a level as would make practical tunneling into the well so as to secure a continuous flow, the problem would be solved. And even if a pump would be required to raise the water to the surface, the maintenance of such a pump would be far less than the cost of operating the river pump and it would furnish pure water and would not need to be run more days in the year than the pump that in emergencies now furnishes the stuff which flows down the Raystown Branch.

The boring of several holes and the installation of pumping apparatus would not cost more than the basin scheme and much less than the storage pond scheme, both of which would, in addition, necessitate the keeping up of the present pumping station.

The artesian plan alone of the four obviates the use of creek water in extremely dry seasons, and it is by far the cheaper. It may be, of course, that water could not be secured at a reasonable depth, but this is hardly probable. All things considered, we believe the drilling of one or more wells would be the plan to adopt.

The National Manufacturers' Association, which had often come into conflict with the Federation. He was charged with having been opposed to organized labor and with having sought to put his nickel plate workers on a ten-hour instead of a nine-hour basis.

Justice Gould, of the District Supreme Court, issued the injunction prayed for by the company. An appeal was taken to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but before that Court could pass upon the validity of the injunction the Buck Stove & Range Company again came into the District Supreme Court, this time with charges of contempt against President Gompers, Vice President Mitchell and Secretary Morrison. Justice Wright found them guilty and sentenced President Gompers to one year in jail, Vice President Mitchell to nine months and Secretary Morrison to six months.

An appeal was taken from this sentence—first to the Court of Appeals, which affirmed it, and finally to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The alleged violation consisted of utterances and acts in furtherance of the boycott. It was charged that Mr. Gompers had rushed out the January number of the American Federationist, the official organ of the American Federation of Labor, so as to evade the decree, which went into effect the day after most of the magazines were out of his hands. This magazine contained the name of the company on the "We don't patronize" or "unfair" list.

was asserted that the restraint was unreasonable. It was because of this reasoning that Justice Harlan sharply arraigned the Chief Justice and his colleagues, and in his dissenting opinion declared that the Courts were usurping the functions of the legislative branch of the Government.

He said the Court in its majority opinion had shown the way by which all subsequent combinations seeking to evade the Sherman act might shape their course. They would set up the contention that their restraint of trade was reasonable. The Court would hereafter be compelled to decide in each instance as to whether or not the restraint was unreasonable. He believed the Sherman act should have been construed as standing by itself, without reference to the common law, and without admitting that restraint of trade might be reasonable.

STREETS AND DOCTOR BILLS

Dust a Menace to Health—Streets Should be Sprinkled.

It is not only because Bedford will be made more beautiful; it is not only because it will create a fairer impression on the minds of the visitors of the summer; but it is because Bedford will be more safe that we urge our council and our citizens to fight the dust devil of our streets,—we almost said "Dust Devil," and had we said it, we would not have struck aside the mark. The fact is the devil of disease lies in the dust of the streets.

The doctors are well aware of the existence of deadly germs in street dust. A Philadelphia physician is reported this week to have contracted a painful disease of the eye caused by the irritation of the dust arising from automobiles.

The following paragraph from the Philadelphia Press deserves republishing:

"With hot weather dust comes; with dust come germs and the possibility of disease. Many germ diseases, and in particular infantile paralysis and other infantile diseases, come in summer, because germs fill the air and the heat rapidly develops them.

"City ordinances and street cleaning contracts wisely require that a street shall always be sprinkled before it is swept. The contractor is paid for this. No street should be swept without it. Whenever a street is swept without sprinkling, a cloud of dust is started which carries danger to health and life, to say nothing of the injury done to every house into to which this dust is blown.

"Complaints should be promptly made to the Bureau of Street Cleaning at the City Hall whenever a street is swept without being sprinkled, either by the hand sprinkler, with which every street cleaner is provided, or by a watering cart. These complaints will be considered and acted upon. City inspectors cannot know of all of these cases and each report does its share in keeping sweepers up to their work."

We almost said "Dust Devil" up above. Now we wish we had said it.

Who Did It?

Last Friday night, May 12, between 10 and 12 o'clock, a company of young men from Ryot, going home from the German Baptist Love Feast, shot a half dozen times around our premises. In the morning when I fed my hogs I found the most valuable one I had shot through the heart. I don't think whoever did it, did it maliciously, but accidentally; but why shoot around peoples' premises and endanger the life of people and stock? A stray cartridge does a good deal of damage sometimes. Please do not do it again.

An Unique Petition

Something unique and aboriginal in the way of a petition has reached Congress. It has come to Speaker Champ Clark and bears 66 signatures in what looks like blood—every name in red.

It is a protest from the Chippewa Indians of the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota, against what they allege is an attempted legalization of fraudulent land sales of their reservation. The signatures are in the prints of thumbs dipped in pokeberry juice. The first name signed to the document is that of a chief, May-zhuc-he-gwon-nobe.

The resignation of Secretary of War J. M. Dickinson from the President's cabinet has been accepted and Henry L. Stimson of New York has been appointed to fill the vacancy. Mr. Dickinson's cabinet relations were harmonious; his resignation is, it is said, due entirely to business demands upon him in his home state of Tennessee.

This Message Is for You.

¶ When a man dies, the first questions asked are these: "How large a family did he leave?" "How much life insurance did he carry?" Everybody knows that a helpless wife, with several small children, facing a selfish world, has big odds against her. You will not submit your dear ones to such an ordeal, will you? ¶ A little care and planning NOW will enable you to carry life insurance protection that will make easy the path of her who must tread it alone when you are gone. ¶ I urge you not to delay. Death comes surely—often quickly. See me at once. I will guide you right.

THE WORD "BUNGALOW."

It Comes From the Hindi Bangla, Meaning a Thatched Hut.

The word bungalow is an Anglo-Indian version of the Hindi bangla, which primarily means Bengali, or of Bengal, and is also applied to a thatched hut, says Country Life in America. It may be worth while to explain how this trivial and merely local name came to be fixed on the Englishman's house in India.

Early residents there engaged in military, administrative or trading duties lived a nomadic life for the greater part of the year in tents. And since there was nothing in the indigenous buildings of Bengal suited to their requirements their first dwelling houses, designed by themselves and built of materials at site, were naturally planned on the model of the Indian service tents to which they were accustomed—that is, a large and lofty room surrounded by double walls of canvas inclosing space between them, with partitions at two or more corners for bath or store rooms.

It is probably, indeed, that in the beginning the tent itself was occasionally covered with the sun proof thatch or bangla. The name and the thatch were all that were taken, and now the origin of the name is forgotten even by most Indians, who accept the resonant, trisyllabic bungalow as the Englishman's own name for his own peculiar house.

CLOTHES AND THE WOMAN.

A Glimpse of Feminine Human Nature In Colonial Days.

That woman nature was much the same in colonial days is witnessed by the following from the diary of Miss Winslow of Boston in "Colonial Holidays." "I was dressed in my yellow coat, my black bib & apron, my pompadore shoes, the cap my Aunt Storer sometime since presented me with—(blue ribbons on it) & a very handsome locket in the shape of a hart she gave me—the past pin my Hon'd Papa presented me with in my cap, my new cloak & bonnet on, my pompadore gloves, etc., etc. And I would tell you that for the first time they all liked my dress very much. My cloak and bonnet are really very handsome, & so they had need be. For they cost an amazing sight of money, not quite $45 tho' Aunt Sukey said that she supposed Aunt Deming would be frightened out of her wits at the money it cost.

"I had my Heddertoll on, Aunt Storer said it ought to be made less, Aunt Deming said it ought not to be made at all. It makes my head itch & ach & burn like anything Mamma. This famous roll is not made wholly of a red Cow Tail, but is a mixture of that & horsehair (very coarse) & a little human hair of yellow hue, but I suppose that was taken out of the back part of an old wig."—Christian Science Monitor.

Origin of Bridge.

A great many people play bridge, and a few fortunate ones occasionally make grand and little slam, but a very small minority have any idea of the origin of the name of this pleasant but uncommon score, says a writer in an English magazine. Close to Boston, in the United States, is the outlying town and harbor of Salem. Certain prisoners kept here in confinement amused their weariness by inventing and playing a card game into which they introduced terms borrowed from the place names in the neighborhood. In the bay are two islands called respectively Great and Little Misery. These names were adopted for their game and have found their way into ours. We even have a game called misery bridge. It is rather curious to think of these Boston prisoners inventing these terms, which were destined to come into use again after all these days intervening. "Slam" is simply Salem abbreviated to a monosyllable.

What It Taught Her.

To top off an expensive education a young married woman of no particular ability in any one line took a course at a dramatic school. She next attempted to secure an engagement, so one day a close and candid friend of her husband asked what good all that training had done, anyhow.

"So far as I can see," the friend said, "that $500 you spent on Ethel's education has been practically thrown away."

"Oh, no, it hasn't," returned the husband mildly. "Oh, no, it hasn't. Her stage experience has taught her to dress in a hurry. Nowadays when I ask her to go to any place with me she can change her clothes in ten minutes. It used to take over an hour."—New York Sun

Platinum.

Platinum was so named by the Spaniards on account of its silvery color, "plata," signifying silver. It was discovered in the sand of the River Pinto, in South America, and was unknown in Europe until 1741, when it was announced in Ulloa's narrative of his voyage to Peru. In 1827 Dr. William Hyde Wollaston rendered it malleable and ductile.

Poetry.

Poetry is not made out of the understanding. The question of common sense is always, "What is it good for?" It is a question which would abolish the rose and be triumphantly answered by the cabbage.—Lowell.

Jamaica.

"Xaymaca," a combination of two words signifying water and wood, from which the name Jamaica is derived, describes exactly the characteristics of the island.

DO NOT SPRAY BLOSSOMS

Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist of Pennsylvania, and President of the State Bee-Keepers' Association, issues an important and timely warning against the spraying of trees or plants while in bloom. He says, "It is surprising that there are a few persons who yet speak of spraying blossoms or spraying trees while in bloom. This is a practice that cannot be too strongly condemned. No one should at any time spray trees or plants while in bloom, especially if they expect to produce a crop by so doing."

"Spraying while in bloom not only kills the bees and other insects that are necessary to carry pollen from flower to flower, and thus insures the setting of the fruit, but it is also liable to injure directly the young and delicate fruit itself, and thus result in lessening the crop. Not only this, but it has been proven that effective and satisfactory results in the control of pests cannot be obtained by spraying while in bloom for two reasons: (1) There are no pests that must be treated by spraying at this time; (2) the stamens or threadlike organs of the flower fill the calyx cup to such an extent while in bloom, that the poison does not readily enter the cup, and the Codling moth, which later enters at this place, is not controlled or destroyed so surely as though the spraying were done after the blossoms have withered or fallen."

"The chief pest for which spraying is done shortly after blooming is the Codling moth, which makes the wormy pome fruits, or apples, pears and quinces. For this two pounds of arsenate of lead should be used in each fifty gallons of liquid, whether this be water, or the bordeaux mixture, or the extra-dilute lime-sulphur solution. To avoid killing the bees, as well as to avoid injury to the blossoms by the action of the spray liquid, and insure the penetration of the liquid to the place where it is needed, the spraying should be done only after the blossoms fall. To insure greater efficiency it can be repeated in about a week or two after the first application."

The Value of the Bee

"We are coming to recognize more and more the importance of the Honey-bee, not only as a producer of a most delicious and healthful food for mankind, but as an essential agency to profitable fruit-growing. Our most extensive and successful orchardists make every effort to keep bees in or near their orchards. There are many kinds of fruit that would not be fruitified or fertilized, if they were not planted near other varieties, and if some agency were not effective in carrying the pollen from one to the other. It has been proven that large blocks of almost any kind of fruit are not nearly so productive as are those planted in strips of a few rows each, alternated with other varieties."

"This shows the necessity of mankind co-operating with Nature in providing for the transferring of pollen or flower dust from one blossom to another. It is a very thoughtless person who would spray while in bloom, and thus destroy the most useful adjunct to fruit growing, viz., the bees, in insuring this natural and necessary transmission of pollen."

"Fortunately, recent definite legislation in Pennsylvania is provided against the practice of spraying while in bloom."

The Bud Moth

Many reports from various sections of this State of damage to fruit trees from the ravages of the Bud moth are reaching Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist, and for the benefit of such fruit growers as do not know this pest the following letter of Prof. Surface may be instructive.

"We have received and examined the infested apple shoots which you sent, and find that the larvae of brown worms which they contain are" the young of the insect known as the Bud moth (Tmetocera ocellana). This is a very common and remarkably destructive insect, which is not often recognized or noticed, and for the remedy of which but little has been said. However it deserves very considerable attention from our fruit growers. Its life history should be understood, and the remedies for it should be applied promptly in the early spring, or, in other words, at this time of year.

The larvae of the Bud moth passes its winter in the silken tube attached to the twigs of the trees. The little tube can often be seen by persons who watch closely for them. It is my own custom to look for these on my trees when pruning, and pick them off by hand. About the time the buds are opening, the larvae crawl to them and gnaw into them, and enter them as you have observed. Where they are especially destructive because they are feeding upon the parts which would otherwise be destined later to develop into growing branches. This terminal growth is destroyed. The leaves are eaten, and because this is done while they are so very young the damage is much greater than though they were older. Later in the year the leaves are held together by silken webs, while the larvae feeds between them.

There are two or three broods per year. This larvae transforms into a little brown cocoon in a cluster of leaves, held together by its webs. From the cocoon comes a little brown and gray moth, which flies, and lays its eggs on other very young and tender bud tips, and the larva of the next brood live in a similar manner. Thus you can see they really can become very destructive.

The best remedy is to spray with an arsenical poison. Where many of the little tubes are seen attached to the twigs of apple trees, it is advisable to add two pounds of arsenate of lead to each fifty gallons of the lime-sulphur spray, and apply this about the time the buds are swelling, or commence to burst. This lime-sulphur spray can be used as strong as for the San Jose scale, and will kill the scale, while the arsenate of lead will kill this pest.

After the leaves are out I recommend spraying with two pounds of arsenate of lead in fifty gallons of the diluted lime-sulphur solution, which becomes a mild contact insecticide, and also a fungicide. To make this, dilute the strong concentrated lime-sulphur, either home-boiled or commercial, with forty times its bulk of water. The best time of year for spraying for the Bud moth is about the time the buds are bursting. One does not need to use the lime-sulphur solution, but can destroy this pest by using two pounds of arsenate of lead in each fifty gallons of water."

The Plant Louse

In order to combat insect pests successfully, one should know something of the life history, and the following description of the Apple Aphid, contained in a letter by Professor Surface to one of his correspondents, is interesting, since it gives valuable points on the method of treatment of this pest, which is now making its appearance in the orchards of the state:

"We have received the apple cuttings which you sent and find the twigs badly infested with the eggs of the Apple Aphid or Plant louse. These eggs are small dark shining objects, which are perceptible to the unaided eye upon close inspection. From them there will hatch, before the end of April, small dark green aphids or plant lice, which are sucking insects, and will commence to feed at once by sinking their long sharp beaks into the young leaves, just peeping forth from the buds. They do a great deal of damage, as they poison the leaves, and cause them to become deformed and curled very much out of their original or normal shape."

Within these curled leaves the plant lice live and thrive very rapidly, giving birth to living young at a rapid rate for many generations. The curled leaves of apple are chiefly due to this cause, and are commonly seen at the time when it is too late to reach the pests within them that have caused the trouble. Two or three years ago the injury to apple trees from this cause amounted to many hundreds of thousands of dollars in this state alone.

The best remedy to apply is a comparatively mild contact insecticide, such as one pound of whale oil soap in five gallons of water, or two gallons of strong lime-sulphur solution in fifty gallons of water, or a kerosene emulsion containing eight or ten per cent. kerosene, or a very strong tobacco decoction, made by steeping for two or three hours one-half pound of tobacco in each gallon of water.

The time of making the application of the spray liquid is very important. To be most effective, this must be after the eggs hatch, which will be now very soon, and before the pests cause the leaves to commence to curl, which will be about the time the blossoms are expanding. If you will examine the trees from which these twigs were taken, you will doubtless see the little dark-colored crawling lice now on the bursting buds. Go ahead and spray them with one of the materials herein mentioned, and you will find a wonderful improvement in the vigor and productivity of the trees. This is the best time of year of all to destroy these pests."

JO. W. TATE and J. ROY CESSNA, Real Estate Agents, Room 7, Ridenour Block

Lynchburg, Va., May 14.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle, N. Y., preached twice here today to attentive audiences. We report one of the discourses, which was preached from the words of the Apostle, "Christ brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." The speaker said:

All around us we see what the Scriptures designate a reign of sin and death. The various forms of life in nature—the grass, the flowers, the lower animals and man—exist for a brief summer time of life, then wither and die. This does not strike us as strange, except in conjunction with humanity, and that because of man's greater intelligence—his appreciation of the value of life, his growth in knowledge and his ability to use life's opportunities with his increased wisdom.

The disposition to shun death is not peculiar to man; it is the law of nature. The smallest creature, by instinct, flees from death. The law of self-preservation is properly said to be the first law of nature. The lower animals, like man, have sensation, an appreciation of pain; but all these things are much more pronounced in humanity than in the lower animals; and the lower the form of life the more slight are these sensations. We are not defending vivisection, but we quite agree with scientists that the pain, the suffering of the lower animals, is as nothing in comparison with that of humanity. We even note the fact that the more refined a human being, the more intense his suffering. Correspondingly, refinement and intelligence bring fear of death and desire for life everlasting.

All mankind seem, instinctively, to hope for a future life, even though with the majority the hope is accompanied with dread respecting its conditions. However, only the Bible reveals a rational basis for faith respecting a future life—a survival of the general death conditions everywhere prevalent. The heathen hope for a future life, but none of them furnish a logical basis for such expectations. Only in the Bible can this be found.

The heathen hope is represented by their great philosophers, Socrates and Plato. Their hope is, in brief, that, in view of man's great superiority over the beast, it must be he will have a future, even though to all appearances death means the same to the human as to the brute. The Bible explains that man was indeed created in his Maker's image and likeness and granted the privilege of eternal life on condition of obedience, but that he disobeyed and therefore became subject to death; and that death, the penalty, effects him exactly as it does the brute creation. But the Bible does not leave the subject here. It tells of God's pity and love, and of His provision to rescue mankind from sin and from death.

God Meets Man's Emergency
Since the Divine sentence is that only the perfect may live, Adam and his race, as imperfect sinners, could not have eternal life after a violation of the Divine Law; but to meet this emergency, Divine Love provided a redeemer, who died, "the Just for the unjust." "As by man came death, by a Man also came the resurrection of the dead; for as all in Adam died, even so all in Christ shall be made alive; every man in his own order" (1 Corinthians xv, 21-23).

Thus God has manifested His character in a way and to a degree which could never have been known to angels or to men had He not permitted sin to enter the world. His Justice has been manifested in the infliction of the death penalty upon our race for six thousand years. Divine Love has been manifested in the arrangement made by which the Only Begotten Son of God, on the heavenly plane, counted in joy to leave His glory and honor and be made flesh and die for our sins. Before the Divine Plan shall be fully consummated, God's Wisdom and Power will also stand fully revealed through His dealing with sin and sinners.

Through the merit of Christ's death, Adam's transgression will be fully offset, and the penalty of Adam's sin will be fully paid to Justice; and Adam himself and all of his posterity, who have shared his penalty, will be set free from the sighing and crying, the pain and trouble, mental, moral and physical, incidental to the execution of the death sentence against sinners. Thus, through the death of Jesus, Divine provision has been made for a future eternal life for mankind—for so many as will appreciate the privilege and conform themselves to the Divine laws and avail themselves of the privileges which will be granted.

The World's Salvation Waits

How natural it is for us to be impatient! The few years of our lives, measuring our knowledge and experience, leave us little appreciation of the span of Eternity, from the Divine standpoint. We are inclined to say, If God designs to do anything for man's aid, why does he not do it immediately? We cry out, O Lord, haste! haste! Behold Adam's children, mentally, morally, physically, in a deplorable condition, unable to help themselves, dependent upon Thy mercy, Thy salvation! Like sheep we are laid in the grave; like the brute beast we seem to perish; we have only a promise of a salvation from death through the Redeemer, and a resurrection from the condition of death.

But God will not be hastened. He has a wise as well as gracious purpose. He has a definite time for every feature of His great work. He has allowed four thousand years to pass before He even sent His Son to begin the work of redeeming mankind, by the payment of a ransom-price. He has allowed nearly two thousand years since to elapse without recovering mankind from sin and death conditions. It is for faith to trust; and yet it is but natural that we should inquire, why this delay? For what does God wait so long? The reply is two-fold:

(1) God leaves time for the birth of a sufficient number of Adam's children to people or fill the earth, purposing that the powers of procreation and the begetting of children shall not continue in the future as in the present. He declares to us that those who attain to that world to come "will neither marry nor be given in marriage," but in this respect will "be like unto the angels," who have no children, who do not propagate their kind.

(2) Incidentally, in connection with man's fall and recovery, God purposes a most wonderful manifestation of His Wisdom, Love and Power in the bringing into existence of a new race of beings, not only higher than human nature, but higher also than angelic natures. God purposes a New Creation whose members will be limited in number and all be made partakers of the divine nature—"far above angels, principalities and powers." This New Creation, the most wonderful exemplification of Divine power ever manifested or ever to be manifested, he has arranged shall be developed during this Gospel Age and in conjunction with the reign of sin and death. It is to be developed from amongst sinners, and is, in rank and time of development, to take precedence over the salvation of humanity from sin, sickness, sorrow and death, to perfection and Paradise restored world-wide.

The New Creation Divine
We have already mentioned the glorious exaltation purposed of God for the New Creation. St. Peter tells us that these will attain the divine nature; and this attainment will be through, or by means of, the power of God working in the heart as the result of faith in "the exceeding great and precious promises" (II Peter i, 4). These will not be coerced into obedience—theirs will be voluntary submission to the Divine will. The test upon them will be loyalty and faithfulness to God to the very limit—to the extreme of self-denial, and voluntary humiliation in the service of righteousness, following in the footsteps of Jesus.

Indeed, Jesus is the first and the Head of this New Creation. None could attain it except by and through His aid. He is the Captain of their salvation. He is their Forerunner in this great "race" to which with Him, they have been invited of God—the reward of which, to the faithful "overcomers," will be "glory, honor and immortality."

Seeking For Immortality

The Apostle writes concerning the Church, the elect "little flock" of called, chosen and faithful ones. He tells us that by perseverance in well doing we are to attain glory, honor and immortality; and that this reward, to the faithful, will come in the First Resurrection, when mortality shall be clothed upon with immortality; when the new body, glorious and of the divine nature will be granted to each of the faithful, as instead of the fleshly and imperfect bodies of the present trial time. In other words, our trial is not to demonstrate the perfection or imperfection of our flesh, for this is already known to God and to us, and to all. "In my flesh dwelleth no perfection." The trial is to demonstrate the loyalty of the will and of the heart. It is faithfulness in conquering the will of the flesh and bringing into subjection to the will of God all the powers of the natural body, so far as possible. It is the test of its loyalty to principle, to righteousness, to God.

St. Paul, as one of these loyal ones, declared before his death, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all those who love His appearing." This includes all who are hungering and thirsting and starving for that righteousness which Messiah's Kingdom is to bring to the Church through the First Resurrection. Righteousness will eventually be brought to the world through the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom, which will put down all things contrary to the Divine will, and uplift every person and principle loyal to God.

The immortality for which the Apostle declares the Church is to seek is of a different kind entirely from that which the world may expect. It is a different kind even from that which the angels possess. It is the immortality which is a feature or quality of the divine nature. This immortality, the Scriptures assure us, was originally possessed by the Heavenly Father alone. We read, "The Father alone hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach, Whom no man hath seen nor can see." The Only Begotten of the Father, the Logos, when made flesh, revealed the Father to mankind (John i, 18). The faithfulness of the Logos as the Man Christ Jesus was rewarded by the Father with glory, honor and immortality—the divine nature.

And this great privilege has been given to an elect "little flock," the Bride class, to become associated with Jesus in the sufferings of this present time and in the glory to follow. The invitation to the Church is to follow the example of Jesus their Redeemer, to walk in His steps, to sacrifice earthly interests and with Him become partakers of the divine nature—glory, honor and immortality (II Peter i, 4). Our Lord Jesus corroborates the same thought, saying, "As the Father hath inherent life (immortality in the highest sense of the word—deathlessness), so hath He given unto the Son that He should have inherent life," and that He might give it unto whomsoever He would—the Bride class, the overcomers, "more than conquerors."

Everlasting Life For Humanity

As we have seen, the Almighty alone, possessed inherent immortality until He gave it as a reward to His glorious Son, "The Beginning of the creation of God." By and by, in the First Resurrection, when the elect "overcomers" shall enter upon this same plane of immortality, the opportunity to become of this nature will be closed, so far as the Scriptures declare.

The immortality enjoyed by the angels, otherwise spoken of in the Scriptures as everlasting life, is not inherent immortality, but an eternal maintenance in life by the Creator, subject to the condition of obedience and righteousness.

In this same sense of the word Adam was immortal, but his immortality was dependent upon his obedience. When he disobeyed, Divine provision for his sustenance was withdrawn. He was expelled from Eden that the sentence of death might take effect, "dying thou shalt die." Similarly, Satan and others of the angels, because of disobedience, will be destroyed, hence their immortality was conditional, as was that of humanity.

The redemption to be accomplished by the Redeemer during His reign as Messiah is to reinstate all the willing and obedient in human perfection and Divine favor, as these were enjoyed by Adam before his transgression. All the wilfully wicked, all not desirous of returning to fellowship with God through the Redeemer, will be destroyed in the Second Death. The test will be so thorough, so crucial, that God declares that there shall be no more crying, no more dying; which implies that there will be no more sin—that the lessons connected with human and angelic transgression will be so thoroughly learned that those found worthy of eternal life will have their characters eternally fixed in respect to righteousness and sin, as God's character is fixed and unchangeable.

Life and Immortality

The Scriptures, as we have already intimated, use the word immortality in a more restricted sense than is common in our general usage. They apply the word to the Father and to the Son, and to the Bride, the Lamb's Wife. The blessing of everlasting life provided for angels and for men found obedient to the Divine will is Scripturally called, not immortality, but everlasting life.

Thus the Scriptures explain the two-fold work of Christ: (1) The work for the world, in providing for all the willing and obedient of mankind, everlasting life; (2) the work for the Church, in making possible for the willing and obedient of the Bride class, glory, honor and immortality, the divine nature. The Scriptural expression is that "Christ brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel" (II Timothy i, 10). Everlasting life was intimated in the remote past, but not specifically stated. The declaration that "the Seed of the woman" should "bruise the Serpent's head" implied a recovery from sin and death, a victory over the Adversary, a release of mankind from the death penalty.

But it was not specific. The promise of God to Abraham, that in his Seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, contained an intimation of a Divine provision for the restoration of humanity from death and the present fallen condition, a restitution to eternal life conditions. But there was nothing specific in it. The Prophets also gave intimations of coming blessings through a great Messiah, but failed to say that eternal life would be the grand result.

The Glory to Come

Not until the Savior appeared and made His consecration unto death, on behalf of the race, was it proper for even Him to give such assurances. But after His consecration, during the three and a half years of His ministry, He declared His mission to be the seeking and recovery of that which was lost, and the giving to His footstep followers of a share with Himself, not only in the sufferings of this present time, but in

The Reel and Line for Trolling

In the matter of the reel and line to use when trolling it depends upon how you intend to go about it. If you are to troll for the most part without the aid of a guide or friend at the oars or paddle, your best plan is to use a quadruple casting reel and a fine caliber silk bait-casting line, so that you may, as above suggested, get out your line initially by casting. If, on the other hand, you are to have the help of a boatman, or if you do not know how to cast, select a double-multiplying reel, as this has more winding-in power than a quadruple reel, and an enameled or oiled silk line of size F or G, fifty to sixty-five yards in length.—The Trolling Outing.

The little son of Mrs. O. B. Palmer, Little Rock, Ark., had the measles. The result was a severe cough which grew worse and he could not sleep. The genuine is in the yellow package always. Refuse substitutes. Ed. D. Heckerman.
